

The 13 Best Under-the-Radar Travel Destinations for 2018

From the reinvented to the relatively unknown, it's time to plan your next getaway.

BY IAN CENTRONE JAN 9, 2018

With each new year, people all over the world optimistically set their resolutions for the twelve months ahead. From establishing fitness routines to setting money-saving objectives, most tend to boil down to becoming better versions of ourselves. For some of us, one of those goals is to travel more, and with a bank of replenished vacation days, now is the perfect time to start narrowing down where to go in 2018.

While hot spots like Iceland and Thailand may have blown up your Instagram feed in 2017, this year will be all about discovering the world's newest up-and-coming destinations—and trust us, there are plenty of incredible contenders. From reinvented capitals to secluded island getaways, here are the top under-the-radar destinations for 2018.

Bodega Garzón

Garzón, Uruguay

Although it's one of the smallest members of South America, the country is teeming with things to do for every type of traveler. The rural region of Garzón (nicknamed Uruguay's Little Tuscany) is located in the heart of Maldonado, just a 30-minute drive inland from the upscale José Ignacio seaside sanctuary. Once a ghost town, its city center got a second wind after celebrated Argentine chef Francis Mallmann opened his restaurant-hotel hybrid, El Garzón. Today, a slew of galleries, such as Galería Pueblo Garzón, display a collection of local works and artists from around the world. But its newest lure lies in the burgeoning wine region, with Bodega Garzón producing some of the top Tannat red and Albariño white wines in the world. Discover the highlights of this up-and-coming gem on DuVine's South America Golden Riviera bike tour. ←